Eliminate Inconsistent, Siloed Data

Everyday struggles within banking seem to almost always center around the availability of data. Whether, its departments not sending data to one another, having to reach out to IT to get data, Cloud data vs on-premise data, or some other issue, the one thing that is consistent is – Data can be challenging to acquire. When you cannot gain access to the correct data needed to do your job, it can be difficult to effectively and efficiently achieve your goals. This has resulted in inaccurate reporting, large variances between budgets and actuals, issues between ALCO and Transfer Pricing, and many more issues.

Alithya's financial services practice provides advisory and implementations services for financial institutions that need help solving their data challenges. Whether you are trying to source data for Transfer Pricing, Risk, Finance or Regulatory Reporting we can help. Our firm has both on-premise and cloud data warehousing solutions that help simplify getting data and distributing it in the correct manner.

Our goal is to create a unified platform and source data one time and use it for many different areas. For example, if I source all the attributes needed for Transfer Pricing, I would find that there is a 80% similarity match for Profitability, or a 60% match for Risk. So instead of sourcing Profitability all over again, I source the 20% of attributes still needed. By using this consumption model, departments will be more engrained, and be reporting using the same data. Utilizing this method we are also able to get data to different departments in a much more timely fashion than in years past.
